

Nathan Eyring Comicbook Coloring Portfolio

I've spoken before about growing up on the docks. It took me a lot of years to work up the escape velocity to launch out of here, and I've never been back. Never wanted to risk tumbling back down into that gravity well; never wanted to risk not being able to claw my way out again.

Yesterday, I went back to the docks. The house I grew up in was burned out. You could clearly see a blackened little skeleton slumped in one corner, arranged in the student-sculpture of a melted aluminum bed, blobs of grey plastic sitting on its sooty bones where a disposable blanket once lay. No more cargo ships. No more dock lizards. A few fishing boats. Spoiled catch rotting dockside. No one giving a shit. No one left alive here to tell the tale of how it was here. Except me. Story of my life.
